Abstract. The article is devoted to migration processes in Russia. The author analyzes the migration policy features in Russian Federation, the existing problems on migration issues, and factors that create obstacles to economic growth and revival of production in regions. Target settlement of territories' advantages and disadvantages are studied in the article. Necessary measures are considered to preserve the socio-economic attractiveness of those territories that are not attractive for migrants today, and to implement regional and federal programs that provide favorable conditions for residence and employment of migrant workers. The described actions will improve the efficiency of the internal migration process' regulation.
